

Coping Strategies for Recovering from a Break-Up

When a relationship ends, it can be challenging to recover your emotional balance. Here are some typical things that people go through after a break-up, with some strategies for coping with the very difficult feelings that you may have. Check the items that you are experiencing, and then check the strategies you will try to help you cope more effectively. Add your own thoughts and ideas.

☐ LONELINESS

- ☐ Tell yourself it is normal to feel lonely after a break-up, and that you can get through this feeling. Breathe slowly until the feeling passes.
- ☐ Identify supportive people in your life and make a plan for increasing your contact with them, such as a weekly lunch date with a good friend.
- ☐ Use an online meet-up group or join a community group to find people with common interests (not for romance, just for friendship and activity).

☐ OBSESSING ABOUT YOUR EX

- ☐ Talk to a therapist about your past relationship.
- ☐ While you grieve the loss of your relationship, identify at least two positive things in your life and spend equal time on them (for example, playing with kids or grandkids, spending time with a pet, or doing a hobby).
- ☐ If you can't stop thinking about your ex, give yourself a specific time to write in a journal about him or her. Then put the journal away and turn your attention to other things.
- ☐ Practice focusing on the present. Set yourself a challenging task and keep your mind on it.

☐ FEELING BAD ABOUT YOURSELF

- ☐ Make a list of your positive qualities.
- ☐ If you know you made mistakes in the relationship, write out action steps for behaving differently in the future.
- ☐ Find a way to help someone else. Volunteer in the community or help a friend or family member with a project. This will boost your self-esteem better than almost anything.
